

I would like to see the FCC keep the Indiana Do Not Call rules as they are and NOT allow the CBA organization that made this petition to win. I am glad that Indiana has taken an even stronger stand than the National Do Not Call Registry and feel that the FCC and other agencies should adopt these rules rather than keep the more lax ones in place. It was a great start but times are changing so quick.

In these times when privacy and security are so valuable, it is annoying and on occasion harrassing when companies call you over and over again, even after telling them you don't want their business. IF they are collecting a debt, updating an account or something related to that, then that is fine. However, it is up to the consumer to decide if they want to explore other options that may be available. While I will admit that some companies do listen to consumers there are many that do not (banking institutions and non banking institutions). IN order to solicit the request they must access your credit report over and over again, which can have adverse affects on your credit if done too many time.

Thank you for the chance to comment on this.
